• Window frames can be tricky to clean. And they are a magnet for dust and dirt, or worse – condensation that can lead to mold. To get into the crevices, employ a toothbrush sprayed with a tiny spritz of furniture polish. It works!

Suggestion: Every few days it would be smart to put on your jeans to make sure they still fit. Pajamas and sweats will have you believe all is well.

Outdoor Opportunities
By COL (Ret.) Grey D. Berrier II

Ice Cream: It Compliments All Our Favorite Summer Outdoor Activities (Part 2 of 3)

I need to start off this week's column with an apology. I initially thought this would only be a two-part series. However, I've received so much positive feedback from individuals who want to learn how to consistently make good homemade ice cream that I'm expanding it to three-parts in order to share all the details on how I go about making it that aren't typically found in the instruction manual that comes with an ice cream maker. So, let's continue our journey in preparing the frozen reward of Summer excursions.

Whether you realize it or not, food preparation involves a lot of science. As if there weren't already enough good reasons to make a batch of homemade ice cream this Summer, when you get down to the bottom line, making ice cream is actually one big science project focusing on the scientific principle of freezing point depression. We all know that liquid water freezes at 32°F/0°C. However, when you add salt (sodium chloride) to water it makes the temperature at which water turns from a liquid to a solid lower than 32°F. Freezing point depression is why seawater doesn't turn to ice until around 28.4°F and why road crews put salt down on the highways to melt snow and ice in the Winter. When you make homemade ice cream, you not only put ice in the external bucket that surrounds the internal container holding the ice cream ingredients, but you also put a little rock salt on top of that ice. As the rock salt slowly melts the ice, heat is absorbed and it brings the ice/salt/melted water mixture in the ice cream maker down below 32°F. When this happens, the ingredients inside the internal container progressively cool below 32°F, solidify, and freeze until it reaches the final consistency where you have homemade ice cream. This causes an electric ice cream maker to stall or an experienced hand-cranked ice cream churner to know the resistance he/she is experiencing means the ice cream is done. Talk about making science enjoyable!

When I'm making homemade ice cream, the churning process remains the same regardless of the flavor I'm making. I've learned it really helps the ice cream solidification process to pre-chill your internal container. I recommend putting the empty container, along with its lid and paddle into the freezer for at least 6-hours before making ice cream. Since we have a large chest freezer and I make homemade ice cream on a somewhat regular basis, I just leave our internal container, lid, and paddle in the chest freezer once it's thoroughly cleaned and dried after each batch is made. (This way, I can make ice cream on short notice, if I'm so inclined.) I've learned our 4-quart ice cream maker requires almost an entire 11-lb. bag of ice to make one batch of ice cream. After pouring the ingredients in the internal container and it's set down inside the external bucket, the electric motor is attached, plugged in, and it starts spinning. (I have a plastic basin our entire ice cream maker sits down inside in the event salt water leaks out the external bucket's weep hole. That way, it doesn't potentially damage our basement floor.) My experience has taught me to add the ice in 1/3-increments. I initially put in enough ice to come up 1/3 the height of the internal container. Then I evenly sprinkle the first scoop of rock salt on top of that ice. With the ice cream constantly churning, I add the second layer of ice, coming up to 2/3 the height of the internal container, followed by the second scoop of rock salt; and finally, the third layer of ice goes in sprinkled with the final scoop of rock salt. I measured the volume of my scoop, which is a little less than 1/4-cup. So, I'm putting roughly 0.2-cups on each of the three layers of ice or a total of 0.6 cups per batch. That makes the total rock salt used for each batch of ice cream a little more than 1/2-cup, but a little less than 2/3-cup.

Each of the three layers of ice requires roughly 3-lbs. of ice in our 4-qt. ice cream maker. It takes roughly 5-minutes to initially add the three layers of ice and rock salt. With the ice level up to the top of the internal container, it's now a matter of listening to the ice cream maker churning. After about 20-minutes, you'll start to notice frost building up on the outside of the external bucket as the ice/salt/melted water mixture cools below 32°F. After about 40-minutes, you'll begin to hear the motor slowing down a little as the ingredients in the internal container begin to congeal. Typically, also at this time, I've found the ice will have melted down approximately 2 to 3-inches from the top of the internal container, so I'll fill that space back up with roughly 1 lb. of ice. With our ice cream maker, it typically runs anywhere from 50-minutes to hour and 15-minutes before it stops churning. Then it's time to enjoy your results!

Next week, I'll share the details on my chocolate, blueberry, and recently perfected strawberry recipes. The work and wait are worth it, when it comes to ice cream. God Bless, Be Safe, and Great Outdoors! ©WBB 2020

Unlikely Encouragement

More to be desired are [God's laws] than gold.

—Psalm 19:10

Today's Scripture:

Psalm 19:7-11

Are you looking for encouragement? Do you need a little boost today amid all the bad news coming your way? The psalmist David can lift your spirit in an unexpected way through some words we often think of as negative.

When we read Psalm 19, we discover a short listing of ways that the Lord's clearly defined "law," or standards for living, can bring positive results. This is unlikely encouragement, for some see God's standards as restrictive and as robbing us of happiness.

Here are some words the psalmist used for God's standards: "law of the Lord" (v.7), "testimony" (v.7), "statutes" (v.8), "commandments" (v.8), "fear of the Lord" (v.9), and "judgments" (v.9). These words have an ominous sound that causes many people to want to avoid or reject them.

But notice what these things bring to the believing, obedient heart: conversion of the soul, wisdom, rejoicing of the heart, purity of life, enlightenment of the eyes, endurance, truth, and righteousness (vv.7-9). That's great encouragement! No wonder David said about God's law that He's given to us, "More to be desired are they than gold . . . sweeter also than honey" (v.10).

Strange But True

by Lucie Winborne

• In the 1st century AD, Roman men and women used cosmetics – lightening their skin with powder, applying red pigment to their cheeks, and painting their nails. You'd hardly want to use their form of nail polish today – a nasty mixture of pig fat and blood. They also painted their heads to camouflage bald spots!
