Take Time to Inventory and Organize Your Fishing Tackle before Hitting the Water

Maybe it's only happened to me. We all know our various seasons for different gamefish species open at roughly the same time each year in PA. However, several of those dates have snuck up on me at times in the past and I ended up in the unenviable position of scrambling to assemble my associated fishing tackle on very short notice, when I either received an unanticipated invitation to join a friend on a fishing excursion or I just suddenly decided it was a good day to head out to a certain waterway to fish. On those occasions, when I didn't live up to the proverbial Boy Scout Motto of "Be Prepared," I've found myself scrambling to grab the various lures and terminal tackle necessary for a particular species and frequently I've forgotten a favorite lure, required hook type/size, or other key items. Little things, like not having forceps for hook removal, nail clippers to trim line tags, or my fish gripper can be frustrating on the water.

For the uninitiated, it can be mind-boggling to walk through the fishing department of a sporting goods store or major retailer. Lures in all different sizes, colors, configurations, and materials await anglers on the display pegs and shelves, each giving off an implied promise it will outperform other offerings, catch numerous fish, and potentially entice "the big one." Then there are all the options when it comes to hook sizes and types, weights, swivels, bobbers, leaders, and other various items of terminal tackle that may or may not be required, based on the species you are pursuing. Like most anglers, I have assembled quite the wide assortment of fishing gear over the years. I started out with one tan-colored Woodstream tackle box with multiple shelves in high school and then I inherited my maternal grandfather's identical tackle box.

Their contents progressively grew until they were both full and it became somewhat laborious to lug both sizable tackleboxes along on every fishing trip. It became a repetitive dilemma finding the particular lure, hook, or sinker I wanted, when the content's organization only existed in my mind and I had to remember which tacklebox and what shelf desired items were located, based on when they were purchased over the years. Eventually, I came to my senses one day on a small stream and realized the same tacklebox that contained my favorite small trout spinners also held a few muskie lures as big as most stocked trout.

It was an interesting project getting all my fishing tackle organized. I remembered one major mistake I had made almost 40-years ago, when I got a small plastic organizer to tote my assorted rubber worms and soft plastic twister tails in the bottom of my one large tacklebox, which did not say "worm-proof." I guess it has something to do with the organizer's specific plastic composition and how it reacts with the rubber or soft plastic of the lures, because in extremely hot weather, they all melted into a continuous 1/4-inch layer in the organizer's bottom and were completely ruined. So, I started my major reorganization project on a rainy afternoon, by setting up our two 8-foot folding tables in our garage. Then I took all the terminal tackle out of both of my tackleboxes, along with collecting all the assorted fishing items I had stashed in our basement, garage, and pole barn over the years (some still unopened in their original packaging). I began by segregating them by the species of fish they were intended to catch. I had sections of the two tables identified for trout, bass, walleye, pike/muskie, panfish, and catfish. I purchased six large "wormproof" plastic organizers with clear lids and reconfigurable internal brackets, so each compartment could be sized to corresponding lures. I thought about my best course of action for future fishing trips.

My ultimate solution was my original Woodstream tackle box became catfish-centric, while my second Woodstream tacklebox became home for all my larger pike and muskie lures. All my smaller lures, hooks, and split shot went into one organizer for trout and panfish. My assorted walleye lures filled two plastic organizers, while my extensive array of bass lures required three plastic organizers to contain them all. Now, my yearly fishing preparations include: making sure everything is in its proper compartment, taking a quick inventory to see if I need anything additional, and sharpening hooks, if necessary. (My fly-fishing gear resides separately in my fishing vest with assorted dry fly, wet fly, nymph, and streamer boxes.) As the weather warms, you're going to want to be on-the-water fishing. Take some time on one of our upcoming cooler or rainy March days to get your own fishing tackle well organized and ready to go. Touching your fishing gear will bring back good memories and create anticipation for the upcoming fishing seasons. Don't forget to replace any old or worn fishing line that may be a weak link in reeling in the fish of your dreams. I can't wait to hear/say, "Fish On!"

God Bless, Be Safe, and Great Outdoors!

Our Daily Bread

Wise Caring

The prudent see danger and take refuge, but the simple keep going and pay the penalty.

Proverbs 22:3

READ Proverbs 22:1-5

The sight was heartbreaking. A pod of fifty-five pilot whales had stranded themselves on a Scottish beach. Volunteers tried to save them, but ultimately they died. No one knows why mass strandings like this occur, but it could be due to the whales' strong social bonds. When one gets into trouble, the rest come to help—a caring instinct that can ironically lead to harm.

The Bible clearly calls us to help others, but to also be wise in how we do so. For example, when we help restore someone who's caught in a sin, we're to be careful that we're not dragged into that sin ourselves (Galatians 6:1), and while we're to love our neighbors, we're to love ourselves too (Matthew 22:39). Proverbs 22:3 says, "The prudent see danger and take refuge, but the simple keep going and pay the penalty." This is a good reminder when helping others starts harming us.

Some years ago, two very needy people started attending our church. Soon, caring congregants were burning out responding to their cries. The solution wasn't to turn the couple away but to put boundaries in place so helpers weren't harmed. Jesus, the ultimate helper, took time for rest (Mark 4:38), and He ensured His disciples' needs weren't displaced by others' needs (6:31). Wise caring follows His example. By tending to our own health, we'll have more care to give in the long term. By Sheridan Voysey

REFLECT and PRAY

How do you recognize your need for rest and refuge? What helps you to serve others over the long term?

Holy Spirit, please empower me to serve others in a healthy, sustainable way.
